Insightful reviews

Rebecca: This book is a good read-aloud book to read to the students because they can relate this book to themselves by having a pet or wanting a pet. Because the main character, Marley, causes so many troubles, it will be easy to talk about the cause and effect of an event. There is definitely a humor in this book that are easy to catch with the children. I have read this book with the first graders and they absolutely love this book. It is fun to read and Marley does some stuff that will makes the kids laugh.

Beth: I read this to 6th graders as a part of identifying literary plot, characters and theme. It was somewhat elementary... Mommy, Daddy, which I explained to my classes ahead. The voices of the characters were strong. The students enjoyed the humor of the story. They easily identified the plot and the characters. After some gentle prompting, they were able to identify the similarity between the theme of "Library Lion" and this book, and were also able to identify the difference.

Alysia: I would use this book in making connections with the children and talking about the pets they may or may not have and the things they do.

Lindsey: Publisher: Harper Collins, 2007 Interest Level: K-3 Lexile Level: 460 Summary: this can be a lovely story, in keeping with the e-book Marley and Me, is set a kinfolk that will get a brand new puppy. The kin needs to learn how to love the dog for who he's although he will get into a few trouble. Review: This tale heartfelt tale chronicles the mischief that domestic dogs get into. The relations is obviously pissed off as noticeable during the painted illustrations in the course of the story. The illustrations help the textual content by means of displaying the expressions of the folks in addition to the dog. Marley will get right into a lot of trouble, as many pups do, yet within the end, he learns that this kinfolk is his home. The endurance that this kin indicates with the dog is a brilliant lesson for kids to learn.
