Insightful reviews

Gina Hott: Lt Magdalena Cruz returns home a war vet with a purple heart and a huge chip on her shoulder.

Not that I wouldn't. Having two of your friends killed by a bomb that also took your leg. Having everyone give you those pity looks. Having your fiance bail out when he sees that you'll have to live without a leg.

On top of that the son of the man who essentially worked your father into his grave keeps following you around and giving your orders. Being the only doctor in the small town where you both live does not give him the right to issue orders about what you should or shouldn't be doing! What is he thinking anyway? Your mother just fired the only help for the farm and she's too busy to take care of everything. Someone needs to help.

Oh, but the prosthesis hurts. The phantom pains just kill when you've been on it too long and you're still determined to use your childhood bedroom even if it is on the second floor and your mother has a perfectly good bed - and couch for that matter - right on the ground floor. The book overall was pretty good. For me, though, the last couple of chapters just dragged. I can't seem to get past that and had the worst time even finishing the book it bothered me so much. I absolutely will not read it again - and I read almost everything more than once - but I'd say it's a decent book if you have nothing better to do, or if you're up with sick kids and want a book that won't keep you enthralled.

Patrice: Lt. Magdalena Cruz returns home to her family's ranch and her mother, in Pine Gulch, Idaho to hopefully hide away from the ugly truth and lick her wounds, literally and figuratively, after surviving the amputation of her left leg, just below the knee. Lt. Cruz has been in the army reserves in Afghanistan when she was injured. She wants nothing more than to be left alone. Of course, she never counted on seeing one of the "arrogant" (her words, not mine) Dalton's, their neighboring ranchers, as soon as she is in Pine Gulch. Wouldn't you know it but Jake Dalton finds her on the side of the road in the wee hours of the morning trying to fix a flat tire while also wearing her prosthetic leg. Of all the embarrassing situations to find herself in, she never pictures this one. Magdalena or Maggie or Lena, depending who is speaking with her or about her, has had a hatred towards the Dalton men ever since her father was killed in a tragic accident that claimed his life.

Jacob (Jake) Dalton is the newest, and only, Pine Gulch family practitioner. After graduating from college, and Medical School, completing his residency and buying the hometown practice from Doc Whitaker, that is. He's had a soft-spot for Maggie Cruz since the day his father died.

When he comes upon her in the early morning hours, at the side of the road, trying to change a tire, he knows he's probably the last person she expected or wanted to see, ever. He changes the tire for her and then follows her for the remainder of the drive to her family's ranch; to be sure she arrives safely. Knowing the traumatic experiences that Maggie has gone thru and her regard of his family, he draws on all his patience in dealing with her brusqueness and cold attitude.

Do Maggie and Jake have a chance of becoming friends? Jake would like to think so; Maggie would say its impossibility. Circumstances and Jake's unwillingness to let Maggie's attitude daunt him, they spend more time in each other's company. Maggie is dealing with PTSD and the very real and also the phantom pains that come from losing a limb. Her trials in trying to conquer normal everyday chores keep her focused on getting through each day. Then something her mother says and something Jake says to her gets her thinking about what she is doing and if she's living or still only "surviving". Then a surprise party holds many revelations for Maggie and helps her look more closely at her own feelings and the decisions she has made and those she needs to make.

What does the future hold for Maggie and Jake? Get the book and read the story to find out.

Diana: I gotta stop reading these freebies. This book had one good thing going for it: it featured a disabled female soldier returning home from the Middle-East. Unfortunately, you have to get 90% through the ridiculous story to find out how she was injured. And her love interest was just way too perfect...bordering on creepy. Even worse was the dialogue from the Mexican-American mother of the heroine. Note to authors: if you do not speak a foreign language, please do not have a character speak a foreign language unless you verify it with a native speaker. Otherwise, you end up with a hot mess of dialogue. Trust me, it was just not very well done.

Booklover: i actually loved the book,it was once life like and speedy n basic story,easy to read Jack and Maggie either are nice characters,Maggie has went via much and now she has back yet she has this nightmares and is discovering it tricky to make adjustment after the amputation yet she is making an attempt at similar time there's Jack who regularly enjoyed Maggie,he is usually there for her and helps her Maggie is conflicted along with her loyalty in the direction of her father yet then her mom makes her see the reality and divulges quiet a couple of secrets and techniques which make an entire difference,Maggie realises her love for Jack they usually have their HEA Good read Recommend it

Pat Amsden: I really, fairly beloved this romance. Magdalena Cruz is a gutsy heroine again from battle in Afghanistan with an amputated leg and an attitude. Jake Dalton is a small city nation physician who grew up within the city and is now taking care of the townspeople. He had a specific thing for Magdalena Cruz growing to be up yet she would not provide him the time of day. not just that yet she blamed his relatives for her father's death. The characters are plausible and 3 dimensional. Magadalena or Maggie is making an attempt to recover from her previous and flow on along with her life. She does not think a person may possibly love her with a stump for a leg whereas Jake sees past that and loves her for every little thing she is. She'd don't have anything to do with him yet she finally ends up being pressured to paintings with him in his health facility as a translater for the Mexican patients. because the tale develops she's compelled to gain blunders have been made on each side and it was once her father's stubbornness which prompted him to push himself to exhaustion inflicting him to be killed in a vehicle accident. She's additionally compelled to achieve Jake is an grand guy and to confess either to him and to herself that she loves him. This is a modern romance with exceptional characters. i will be searching for extra books by means of RaeAnne Thayne.

Dora Okeyo: i've got taken to examining Romance novels in among classics and a few Philosophical books. they give a miles wanted psychological break, and that i enjoyed examining Dancing within the Moonlight. Maggie has a stump, after a bomb went off whereas she used to be in Afghanistan and she or he is tough. She does not wish a person to pity her, and turns out to close humans out-but this does not cease Jacob Dalton. the tale is worthy interpreting simply because Maggie doesn't enable her protect down. She loves Jacob, yet her worry of him now not loving her and not using a leg-and that he'd pity her, makes it not easy for her to confess it. Jacob is annoyed through this and his efforts to end up her fallacious hold hitting a wall-until the tip the place she ultimately accepts that she would possibly not have a leg, yet she nonetheless has a brain and a middle and is valuable of love. It makes you actually query what squaddies undergo in the course of and after a battle and simply how a lot they're by no means the same. I presented this ebook 3 stars simply because I felt as if Jacob did lots to win her over-and that Maggie at some point soon must have met him halfway-call it inquiring for the correct tale, but a few extra disclosure concerning the warfare and her studies except getting the crimson center can have enabled a deeper emotional reference to her. it is a tale to read.
