Insightful reviews

Theresa Leone Davidson: I have read plenty of novels in a series, with one main lead character and of course the same supporting characters; that's fine, they almost always have different stories with different villains and are self-contained enough that if you haven't read the novel before (or don't remember it well) you're still ok. I do not, however, care for novels that use the same villain and are written with little or no closure because the author wants to return to the same bad guy. Same city, same cast of characters all the way through, boring... Arthur Conan Doyle could do it with Sherlock and Dr. Moriarty but Julie Smith is no Conan Doyle. Unfortunately, her stories are just good enough that I do want to know when the bad guy (in this case, the almost unbelievably evil Errol Jacomine) is caught. I would not pay two cents for the next book - thank goodness for libraries. If he isn't caught in the next one, I'll give up on her.

Linda Look: skip langdon a new Orleans detective is a likeable character. she hunts her old enemy Errol jacomine who leads a new group called the jury. their mission is to execute those who. have escaped prosecution. took me a long time to finish this book.
