Description

To Build a Fire is one of Jack London's most beloved short stories. A heartbreaking tale set in the vast wintry landscape of the North, it endures as one of the greatest adventures ever written.

Insightful reviews

Mimi: An unnamed man leaves the Yukon Trail and sets out to meet up with friends, but the weather is no good for traveling on foot. He has a husky with him, and the dog knows he shouldn't go out in such weather, but he does anyway. If you ever wondered what it's like to be ill prepared and lost in the middle of winter out in the great Yukon wilderness, this story can give you an idea. (If you also ever wondered what it would be like to have hypothermia while a dog gives you the "told you so" look, this is the story for you.)

I've always liked Jack London's stories; they never end well for willfully ignorant or cruel characters. There aren't many writers who could characterize dogs with dignity and intelligence and make them memorable. Arctic breeds are especially intelligent and have lots of personality and attitude, and London captured them just so in his stories.

Ashley: This story aches silent cold and gray, and finally, black. I can't help but think of it as I look across my yard (where it is not, incidentally, 50 degrees below zero) to see 4 foot drifts that I never want to have to trudge through. How I hated this story for making me feel and see things I never wanted to! And hoping that all the work in reading it, all the vicarious pain, would amount to a reward, and finding that I - as I found I became the man while I read - made irrevocable, and deadly critical mistakes wore me down, leaving me broken by the end of the story. As the final image in the story, the peppy trot of the dog away from his 'food-provider' and towards some wayward camp, however far, suggested a striking dissonance between the living and the dead.

Jennifer M. Hartsock: It describes his chew spit frozen his beard. This is probably one of the most disgusting descriptions I've ever read. Well done, but still very unattractive. I think if you're already inhaling cold air (making it hard to breath) smoking would impair you even more. I love the image of me (the reader) picturing him see himself in his mind with the group of guys. It's as if he's imagining himself being somewhere else while I imagine him doing this.

A regular traveler hikes to the top of climbing timberland, and there he looks out of the landscape. This man doesn't have any imagination, so this view is very blasé to him. He feels the same regarding the weather: it just "is"—more a matter-of-fact type of person than what-a-beautiful-sight type. He describes the Husky biting away at its feet as "instinct" without thought; to me, this is exactly like him. This is comparing the two, making them alike. It also emphasizes how much time it takes to do a task, such as removing his mittens or arriving at the forks of the creek.

Tweety: What?! Tell me he did not simply cease the tale like that. i actually cannot take books approximately idiots, i actually can't. i don't love it whilst humans imagine they recognize higher than those that have already got skilled what they're going through. when you are making plans a visit north within the iciness i would not learn this first, it is adequate to make a person paranoid. we now have a truly silly guy who thinks he is familiar with all concerning the cold, and he's so certain of his personal services that he does not take a companion with him on a trek in Yukon, simply because he's invincible and is a true guy so he of course, does not want anyone. it truly is 1947 and 81.40° lower than F. He has a dog, suits and his personal wits, who may wish more? (view spoiler)[every little thing attainable occurs to him, he breaks via a hidden creek, freezes his feet, fingers, nostril and cheeks. Then his palms are so frozen he cannot grip the suits so he makes use of his tooth after which simply holds them along with his palms, considering he is frozen he does not think the suits burning his skin. On an on it goes. He even contemplates slaughtering his puppy so he can hot his arms inside of its body, yet his arms are too frozen to snatch him. Awful, lousy what-not-to-do story. (hide spoiler)]If I rated this for the writing it might be five, if I rated it for its caution it might be 4 but, ranking it on amusement it's a one. this can be fairly depressing, and that i don't love being left by way of an writer depressed. Do no matter what you will have in the course of the tale yet do not go away all of it in doom and gloom on the end. PG for the thematic events. I will not hand this story to anyone. Boys could most likely love a lifestyles vs demise tale, though.

Charles Kato: Jack London's "To construct a Fire" is a haunting tale concerning the divide among a few men's intelligence and their occasionally buried instincts, differently referred to as universal sense. the tale opens with "the man" climbing during the absurdly chilly Klondike within the useless of wintry weather with little experience, few offers and simply his puppy as a companion. He has been warned approximately vacationing on my own in such harsh stipulations yet feels he's clever adequate to beat any challenge that nature may well sling his way. difficulties did take place and quickly. It all started with an come upon over skinny ice. This was once one of the encounters that may were refrained from and was once compounded extra by way of foolishly lights a fireplace less than a spruce tree, which "capsized its load of snow" placing out the wanted hearth below. a lot of these occasions finally overpowered the younger guy and eventually he used to be snuffed out like the hearth below the spruce tree. the writer means that if a guy believes his personal intelligence can loose him from any challenge with out preparation, then it really is that overconfidence that might bring about a guy to his demise. Classic, needs to read.

Emily Togstad: Emily Togstad11-1Good Reads "To construct a Fire" "To construct a Fire" is a brief tale written via Jack London. i have merely learn a decide on few of Jack London's books, or stories. This one was once no longer one among my favorites. the tale happened at the Yukon path and close to the Henderson creek. the elements ranged from -50 levels to -107 degrees. It used to be very chilly and dark. It made the tale dreary. the most character, the man, was once attempting to get to the camp to satisfy the boys. From Henderson creek he used to be 10 miles away. the fellow was once a brief and alert new comer to the land, with pink facial hair and tobacco in his mouth. He gave the look of a true adventurer. Or lumberjack in my opinion. Going with the fellow was once a dog. The puppy was once a husky and half wolf. The husky used to be additionally adventurous just like the man. The puppy used to be timid, and petrified of the man. I don't blame him. the guy was once a bit scary. The tale is set the man, happening an experience to the camp to fulfill the boys. a few tragedies came about though. the fellow encountered the Henderson creek. a result of in all likelihood skinny ice, the fellow made the puppy move first. i assumed that used to be rather mean. The puppy fell in. It wasn't a tragedy for the man; he didn't relatively just like the puppy that much. round lunch time the guy determined it was once time to construct a pleasant hot fireplace so he may perhaps devour his bread in his handkerchief. After lunch the fellow persevered on his journey. the fellow went first this time, and fell throughout the ice. He knew he may die if he didn't hot up and construct a fire. by way of this time the fellow may well slightly believe his hands. He needed to continue violentlybeating his palms throughout his chest, simply because they have been numb. i presumed that was once a bit strange. the writer saved repeating that he did that. It wasn't necessary. He attempted and attempted to construct a hearth together with his matches, yet finally he dropped the matches. After utilizing his mouth and either palms to get the matches, he used to be ultimately in a position to make a fire. this fireplace didn't final lengthy though; He didn't construct his hearth out within the open. He was once lower than a snow coated tree. Snow fell correct on his hearth due to this tree. by means of now the fellow used to be yes he may lose a couple of feet and arms by the point he reached the camp. He began running. After working for some time he fell. understanding he was once going to die. the fellow simply determined to offer up. So he laydown and died.I might suggest this ebook to male excessive schoolers that like experience stories. i did not locate the ebook fascinating or cool in any respect so i do know the other lady wouldn't like it. the tale was once to descriptive, It felt as if it took endlessly for the tale to maneuver on. i might provide this brief tale one famous person out of five.
